A shot in the dark

The theory is you can taste the finest haute cuisine even with your eyes closed. Now new Parisian restaurant Dans le Noir is putting it to the test by opening its doors, but not the blinds.

A meal at the prestigious eatery is an experience like no other – enjoy your food without the sense of sight. Visitors are plunged into darkness as they enter and guided to their table by waiters. In Restaurant Dans le Noir, presentation is less of an issue (as you won't be able to see what you are eating) – taste, texture and smell are the greatest concerns. And forget designer labels; diners are judged on conversation skills alone.

This new venture is the first of its kind in Paris, and also features a bar, which opens late to keep you in the dark until the wee hours.
